

Ankit Solves a Mystery

One morning Ankit saw the beautiful snow outside and wanted to play with it. But then he heard a noise from his mom's room.

He checked the closet; he said "Nothing is here!" but something strange was in the closet, it was a big stick.

Ankit thought, "I know that stick doesn't make any noise. Maybe it could have moved because sometimes stick get slippery and fall down." But the stick was straight, so the noise is not from the stick.

Then Ankit heard it again and he said, "Hey! the noise is not from the mom's room it is from the kitchen." He went to the kitchen and checked all the kitchen cabinets. There was lot of stuff in there. Ankit thought, "Do we eat that much?" Then he saw a glass which had fallen. He picked it up and dropped it back again, he said to himself, "It isn't the same sound which I heard."

But then he heard it again and said, "The noise is from the toy kitchen!" He checked the toy oven, and saw a plate. He picked it up and then dropped it. It didn't make the same sound but it was almost the same sound which he heard.

This time Ankit heard the sound very closely. It was coming from his room. He went there and saw his baby sister playing with his favorite car which he was trying to find yesterday.

He took it from her and then dropped it. It made the same sound. He said, "Oh! so this was the sound." He was so happy. He gave the car back to his baby sister and told her to not to drop it again.

Then he said to himself, "Now I can play in the snow with my friends. I am going to play snow ball fight."
